OBJECT AND METHODS.

This Society provides wholesome life and training in selected private families for children whose own homes have been broken because of the death, ill health or character of their parents, or because they themselves need either a longer or shorter period of character building or physical nurturing and building up to fit them to take their places in the world.

Children placed in foster homes are under the constant supervision of paid visitors of the Society. Board, usually at the rate of $2.50 a week, is paid for the younger children. For the older boys and girls, homes are found where they can earn their way while attending school, or wages, if they do not go to school. Parents are required to pay as much as they are able, and the Society supplements their payments from funds raised largely by donations and subscriptions. Parents are allowed to visit the children, except in unusual cases, and brothers and sisters are kept together.

Whenever possible, we prevent the need of children being separated from their parents by awakening and organizing the family and local resources, material and spiritual, and working out the problem in the children's own homes.

If our investigation proves that another agency is better suited to meet the special needs of a family, we refer it to the appropriate society. We are, therefore, glad to have people bring to us cases of children in any locality needing any kind of help, rather than to hesitate because of not knowing the exact society to apply to.

The Society, which is the oldest organization in Boston caring for both boys and girls, is non-sectarian and has no public aid, but is supported entirely by voluntary contributions. Communications should be addressed to the Boston Children's Friend Society, 48 Rutland Street, Boston, Mass.

REPORT OF GENERAL SECRETARY.

Human lives cannot be put into a report. Hence the following can but suggest the fulfillment of our trust to the children, and to the community which makes our work possible.

This is the first full report since 1913. It therefore contains certain figures for the years 1914 and 1915 as well as for 1916.

The service for which our Society exists is the healing or making whole of the lives of children and their families, A healing work. that have been broken or are endangered by any of the weaknesses or unfortunate circumstances that flesh is heir to. Our tools are the various resources of the community, no one of which is too insignificant or too momentous to be brought into the service of a child, provided that service is needed.

To every child belongs the right to a wholesome, normal life. And to the community belongs the right to see that Foster homes. every child has it. The wholesome family is where it can best be realized. Much of our help, therefore, is given through this great resource, the foster family, which is willing to receive into its circle the child who, for one reason or another, needs what a good home can give and what cannot be had in his own home, — intelligent care, opportunity, and training in the fundamentals of useful and enjoyable association with others. We speak of our use of foster homes first because it is for their help that most applications are made to us. The application, however, is but the door which is opened to us for help in solving the problem, and in only 16 per cent. of the cases handled by us last year did it prove best for us to receive the children according to the original request. During the previous year this figure was only 10 per cent.

While we are called a placing-out Society, much of our time and effort are spent in trying to help families to work out their own salvation by the use of their own Helpful resources — relatives, friends, churches, etc. — counsel. and often by bracing up the character of parents, thus improving the care of their children, we prevent the expected break in families. In response to 29 per cent. of the applications to us last year our help was along these lines; it sometimes took months of careful and tactful work by our visitors to bring about satisfactory results, and of course in some cases we failed.

Twenty-six per cent. of the applications made to us were referred to other organizations. This figure was 37 per cent. during 1915. In both years it included Co-operation with other societies. many cases in which we made a thorough investigation, which revealed the fact that the best solution to the problem could better come through a type of aid that some one else was better equipped to give, and who, accepting our investigation to a great extent, took up the work where we left off. The most cordial co-operation exists between the many charities of the State.

During the past year 193 children in foster homes or schools were under the care and active supervision of our As to our children. Placing-Out Department. They ranged in age from a few months to twenty-one years, and in some cases still older children needed the continued counsel and friendship of our visitors, who had started them in schools for special training, such as hospitals and normal schools. Nor was our financial aid always cut off on their reaching twenty-one.

Of the 67 new children received and placed in foster homes, 30 were placed temporarily only, either delicate children to be built up during the summer or children placed to help over a family crisis such as comes when a mother goes to a hospital. The other 37 new children came to us for more or less permanent care, but looking forward whenever possible to reuniting with their own people in years to come. Many of them, however, will doubtless grow up in the homes we find for them.

Since the war began and the cost of living has increased, the applications from people who want to take children to board have dropped. From 1915 to 1916 they fell off 47 per cent. With 88 per cent. of the new children placed during that period under fifteen years of age, and therefore not suitable for homes where they could earn their board, our problem of the supply of homes has been serious. On the other hand, applications for older girls to do housework increased 88 per cent. This has not meant as much help as might be expected, for it is homes and not jobs we find for our children, and we have to be wary of people who come to us merely in search of cheap help. But we wish to bear witness to the tireless, sympathetic and intelligent interest our children find in their foster homes. Indeed our foster mothers do the real work in character building and the standard of our placing-out depends largely on our ability to choose families of the right mental caliber and loyalty.

In addition to these 193 children under our active care were 17 children who had either become independent or had been returned to their families, yet with whom we still felt the need of keeping in fairly close touch. Fifty-five children were in their own homes but under the oversight of the workers in the Department of Investigation and Counsel, who were trying to work out the solution to a serious situation or waiting for an impending crisis that would make action possible.

Looking back over the year's work we find a number of factors appearing again and again in the troublous situations which brought people to us for help. We are not true to our trust unless we seek out these factors in every case, and, while doing our best work with the particular family, face squarely the issues we find by examining our work for the year.

Intemperance was a causative factor in the difficulties of 18 per cent. of the families who had to come to us. Illegitimacy brought us 20 per cent. In most of these cases the young mothers came from homes broken by intemperance or death, feeble-mindedness or ignorance, and nearly always from homes that lacked healthy play for grown-ups and children alike.

Through the League for Preventive Work, an association of twenty-two agencies dealing with cases of individuals and families needing either social or medical aid, facts and figures from case records that bear on the problems of feeble-mindedness in particular, and will soon include alcoholism as well, are being pooled. They will prove to be of great value in bringing home to the agencies themselves and the community, the social and economic cost of these evils, and will help to shape legislation and policies that will tend to lessen and control them.

We find that in the 266 different families that came to us for help last year, the factors of trouble that appeared most often were as follows: illegitimacy, 20 per cent.; immorality, 18 per cent.; intemperance, 18 per cent.; illness of one of parents, 14.5 per cent.; waywardness of child, 14 per cent.; ill health of child, 12 per cent.; death of father, 11 per cent.; death of mother, 10 per cent.; separation of parents, 9 per cent.; feeble-mindedness, 7.5 per cent.; insanity, 2.5 per cent.

As we see the stream of troubled people who have needed help, and then see the readjustments, developments and transformations that have been brought about, we are impressed anew with the fact that the great liberator and the universal solvent is what Henry Drummond calls, "The greatest thing in the world," Love, — a word that we seldom hear in social work and yet in its fulness it includes our greatest resources. As we can pass a ray of light through a prism, says Drummond, and see it come out the other side broken up into its component colors, so Paul, in the thirteenth chapter of First Corinthians, passes this thing Love, through the magnificent prism of his intellect and it comes out broken up into its elements, and, according to Paul, the spectrum of Love has nine ingredients: patience, kindness, generosity, humility, courtesy, unselfishness, good temper, purity (guilelessness) and sincerity.

In the majority of our cases we find the opposite of Love — impatience or brutality, meanness, arrogance, thoughtlessness, selfishness, anger, immorality or deceit — mixed up in the causes of the troubles that bring people to us. These are the subtlest enemies of the human mind, and, if indulged, lead into labyrinths of trouble, both mental and physical. Our work is not well done unless we bring to bear on every problem that we touch the thought or the influence that is going to overcome the trouble, by cutting at the roots of its cause. No amount of equipment, of clinical examination and observation, of completeness of record, can avail in truly healing our “patients” unless we can have the spiritual insight that will reveal the possibilities of good in everybody, and not only enable us to see clearly how best to bring it out, but to choose foster families and others capable of the task, and on our own part, to evoke only a helpful response from our “patients” themselves and all others whose aid they may need. We can make whole only as we can see what is lacking and help to supply it, whether it be a home for a child (and in our work we realize that a home is not a material structure), an opportunity or an awakened understanding of parenthood.

To those who have helped us with money, with professional or lay services, whether individuals or organizations, we extend our thanks.

CARRINGTON HOWARD,
General Secretary.
